“The Box,” follows the decisions of a famous painter who discovered, that a mysterious box on his coffee table has inhaled his entire family. The painter bargains to give up anything else other than what the stubborn box is requesting, the one thing it believed he cared for the most, his left hand that built his legacy.

“Solum’s Song,” watches over a demon named Solum, who stalks a heart broken teen named Amber, through a night’s down pour. With the intention to possess her, he instead falls in love, with pulsing desires to touch. The beast struggles with his fear of the vile consequence of breaking the one rule of the underworld; to never touch a human unless they are to be possessed, and with his thirst for Amber’s love when she is in harm’s way and most unfortunate.

“The Unknown Coming,” shadows a man named Gabriel, who’s farm, and family, are under attack by a deadly beast approaching from the fields. While grieving over his five dead children under mounds of dirt in his front yard due to a recent wide spreading disease, Gabriel’s wife is next as she suffers the symptoms of the sickness. Fixed on the porch, Gabriel refuses to rest until his rifle puts the beast down for good. The only problem is, it won’t stay down, Gabriel’s wife is on her last breath, and he's running out of bullets.
